Director

Kendra Dimond is a director with Daylight in its Washington, D.C. office. She has over 25 years experience working with government agencies, health care providers, academic medical centers, pharmaceutical and biotech companies, and other related entities on regulatory and law enforcement issues, with emphasis on state and national Medicare and other health care program fraud investigations, criminal and civil litigation, Medicare and Medicaid reimbursement, and biomedical research regulatory and contracting issues.

Prior to joining Daylight, Kendra's experience includes consulting services for clinical research-related entities and partnerships in two major law firms specializing in health care matters. Her public service includes serving as Investigative Counsel to the US Senate Special Committee on Aging and as Senior Deputy Attorney General for the Pennsylvania Medicaid Fraud Unit. She also served as a Senior Attorney in the HHS Office of General Counsel for the Office of Research Integrity and as Acting Director of the National Institutes of Health Office of Legislative Policy and Analysis.

Kendra has assisted health care related entities in structuring effective compliance plans, conducted numerous internal investigations related to accusations of misconduct or fraud, created or revised internal policies, negotiated research agreements between health care entities and pharmaceutical companies, and assisted federal grantees in resolving research misconduct and conflict of interest issues.

Kendra received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Gettysburg College, a Master of Arts from Pennsylvania State University, and a Juris Doctorate from Dickinson School of Law.
